Cytochrome P450 isozymes expressed in rat hepatocytes in primary culture. Cytochrome P450 isozymes are involved in the conversion of xenobiotics into active derivatives. The diversity of P450 isoforms, the degree of xenobiotic activation and the main metabolic pathways still remain largely unknown in vivo. A culture model of primary rat hepatocytes, in which P450 are active and metabolically competent, was developed to investigate these issues. Rat hepatocytes were cultured on type I collagen-coated wells. Some experiments were performed in the presence of phenobarbital (PB), an inducer of P450. After 3 days, P450 transcripts were synthesized and the corresponding P450 isoforms were shown by Western blot analysis and immunofluorescence. A high concentration of ethanol (100%) was used to study its capacity to metabolize PB-inducible P450 isoforms. A full range of CYP isoforms was expressed in hepatocytes and some of them were localized in the apical canalicular membrane. Although the absolute expression levels for these isoforms in cultured cells were much lower than in liver, they were well correlated with those in liver homogenates. Heat, Adrien Broner and Chris Algieri have a potential fight in the works that could have them in a mix of the amateurs and pros.
